ELDERLY PRIEST KILLED IN FRENCH CHURCH, ATTACK CLAIMED BY ISIS

Assailants loyal to Islamic State forced an elderly priest to his knees before slitting his throat and took several worshippers hostage in a French church on Tuesday before police shot the attackers dead. It was the latest in a wave of attacks in Europe inspired by the Islamist militant group based in Iraq and Syria that is on the defensive against a U.S.-led military coalition in which France is a major partner. The knifemen entered the church during morning mass near the northern city of Rouen, northwest of Paris, killing Father Jacques Hamel, an 85-year-old parish priest, and taking four other people hostage, one of whom was seriously wounded. REUTERS

US ISSUES GUIDELINES FOR RESPONDING TO MAJOR CYBERATTACKS

The White House issued new instructions on how government agencies should respond to major cyber security attacks, attempting to combat perceptions the Obama administration has been sluggish in addressing threats from sophisticated hacking adversaries. The announcement was made amid suspicion in the U.S. government that hackers working for Russia may have engineered the leak of emails stolen from the Democratic National Committee. The directive, which was years in the making and includes a five-point scale to grade the severity of an incident, provides the first public guidance on the specific roles of federal agencies in coordinating efforts to investigate and respond to cyber security breaches in government and private sector. REUTERS

CREWS BATTLING CALIFORNIA BLAZE FACE HOT, DRY CONDITIONS

Firefighters battling a wildfire about 40 miles north of Los Angeles faced another day of brutal heat on Tuesday after reporting progress containing the blaze under cooler conditions overnight. About 300 miles further north in drought-hit California, another fire ravaged a hilly area near the scenic coastal town of Carmel-by-the-Sea, churning through 16,100 acres and destroying 20 homes, authorities said. About 3,000 firefighters have been struggling to control the so-called Sand Fire in a 59-square-mile area on the northwestern fringes of the Angeles National Forest since Friday. The fire was 25 percent contained on Tuesday, up from just 10 percent on Monday evening, as crews backed by bulldozers hacked out buffer lines around the blaze, authorities said. REUTERS

Freshman says she won't return to school after rape case handling

Joanna Vandyke said she did not want to return for her second year at Emmanuel College after a school disciplinary hearing found insufficient evidence to hold a man she accused of raping her responsible.

A former Emmanuel College freshman says she won't be returning to campus this fall after the school's conduct board found a fellow student she accused of raping her not responsible for sexual misconduct.

The woman, Joanna Vandyke, announced her decision in an open letter on Facebook that's since been shared over 1,500 times. In it, she says she was raped by the man during the second half of her freshman year and reported it to school officials.

Vandyke said she was encouraged by an administrator to handle the allegations through the school's internal disciplinary code. In June, after a hearing and investigation, the college said there was insufficient evidence to find the accused responsible.

"My rapist is able to live on campus without a slap on the wrist," she wrote. "You are fully aware of how he violated me several times and did not think a rape kit and countless accounts of the night was sufficient evidence."

"For this reason, I have decided to not return to Emmanuel in the fall. It is clear to me that you value your reputation more than you value your community. The compassion that you spoke so strongly about in the beginning of my time with you was only skin deep. You host events that 'empower' women like myself to speak freely of issues like sex and race, but these are just empty words.

"I hope this letter reaches any young girls who are seventeen and eager to begin their college career with you," Vandyke concludes. "I just want them to know that you were not on my side and certainly will not be on theirs."

Vandyke said in a phone interview that she didn't expect the note to become so widely shared, but was happy that it was getting attention.

"My original intent for the letter to be on Facebook was to explain to my friends why I wasn't going back," she said. "Over and over again I'd have to explain why I wasn't coming back in the fall and it became emotionally exhausting."

Between a dozen and two dozen women reached out to her to share their own stories about being sexually assaulted on the campus, she said.

"I have 250 unread messages in my inbox from people that are just saying how much they love me and support me," she said. "I never would've expected this kind of feedback."

"I still consider the people [at Emmanuel] the best friends I ever made," Vandyke said. "Leaving them is really hard and I wish I didn't have to do it like this."

In a statement, the college said it was "deeply concerned" about the post.

"Emmanuel's mission is rooted in social justice and care for others, starting with our students," it read. "Cases of sexual assault are tragic and the College handles all allegations in a comprehensive manner guided by sensitivity, compassion, fairness, and in full compliance with Title IX. ... The College maintains comprehensive policies and trainings to prevent sexual assault and harassment and provide caring assistance to victims. We are always willing to discuss and proactively address issues of concern."

According to Know Your IX, an advocacy group that works to empower students to stop sexual violence on campus, many victims of campus sexual violence are reluctant to turn to the criminal justice system, and having a Title IX grievance process for claims of sexual harassment or assault can help adjudicate such concerns without involving the criminal justice system.

Nothing about filing an internal grievance with the school would preclude a victim from going to the police, though the group notes that is a rarely successful recourse: Only a quarter of reported rapes lead to an arrest, and only a fifth lead to prosecution.

"I went to the school and they suggested that it be internal, so I didn't report it to the police at all," Vandyke said. "At this point I've lost faith in the system and will probably not pursue [criminal charges]."

Man who supplied gun to Tsarnaev gets 6 months

Merhawi Berhe, 22, pleaded guilty to supplying the gun later used by the Boston Marathon bombing suspects to kill an MIT police officer.

CHRIS CAESAR
@MetroBOS
chris.caesar@metro.us

The man authorities said was the source of a handgun later used to kill MIT police officer Sean Collier was sentenced to six months in a Boston federal court Tuesday morning.

Merhawi Berhe, 22, had earlier pleaded guilty to possession of a firearm with an obliterated serial number, Boston.com reported. Berhe reportedly supplied a black Ruger P95 to Stephen Silva, who then later gave the weapon to his then-friend Dzhokhar Tsarnaev.

Silva himself pleaded guilty to weapons charges and was sentenced to 17 months, the time he's already served, the report read.

Judge William Young said he did not consider the fact that the gun was ultimately used in connection with the murder of the young officer when making his decision about the sentence.

"It would be capricious were I to hold that against Mr. Berhe," he said, though he noted it was still a dangerous crime that demanded jail time.

Berhe was the seventh and final suspect to be tried in connection to the Boston Marathon bombings, WHDH reported.

Cops: Gun confiscated from uncooperative teen outside Dorchester court

Boston police arrested a teen outside Dorchester District Court after he failed to follow their instructions and was later found to have a gun, authorities said.

Around 2:15 p.m. on Monday, officers responded to a report of a man with a gun near the Dorchester District Court at 510 Washington St., police reported. Upon arrival, police located the individual matching the suspect's description.

Authorities, with their firearms drawn, began giving instructions to Raughn Williams, 18, of Boston, who did not comply with their directions to show his hands, police stated. Instead, Williams allegedly responded, "Why?" and paced back and forth while holding the front of his waistband with his right hand.

After two minutes, Williams got down on his right knee and officers quickly moved in and handcuffed him, authorities said, adding that he had earlier threatened to shoot one of his family members. A search of the suspect revealed a firearm in his right pocket.

"That kid's lucky he didn't get shot," an unnamed officer said at the scene.

Williams was charged with unlawful possession of a firearm, ammunition possession, carrying a loaded firearm on a public way and assault by means of a dangerous weapon, authorities added. JASON NUCKOLLS

Hillary Clinton makes history, secures Democratic nomination

The former secretary of state was officially named the Democratic nominee on Tuesday.

Former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton secured the Democratic Party's 2016 nomination for the White House on Tuesday, becoming the first woman to head the ticket of a major party in U.S. history.

In a symbolic show of party unity, Clinton's former rival, Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders, told the chairwoman from the convention floor that Clinton should be selected as the party's nominee during a state-by-state roll call at the Democratic convention in Philadelphia.

Earlier, delegates from South Dakota had given Clinton 15 votes, ensuring that she had more than the 2,383 votes needed to win the nomination. She emerged with a total of 2,842 votes to Sanders' 1,865 votes.

After a tough battle with Sanders, Clinton is now the party's standard-bearer against Republican nominee Donald Trump in the Nov. 8 election.

Delegates chanted "Hillary, Hillary" as Maryland Sen. Barbara Mikulski formally put forward Clinton's name for the alphabetical roll-call vote. REUTERS

Moments after Hillary Clinton was announced as the 2016 Democratic presidential nominee on Tuesday, hundreds of delegates walked out of the convention center. Protesters carried Bernie Sanders signs and chanted, "Tell me what democracy looks like. This is what democracy looks like."

Many protesters staged a sit-in — what they called a "silent revolution" — in the media tent, and armed law enforcement officers stood at the doors of the Wells Fargo Center in Philadelphia blocking media and protesters from getting in and out of the tent.

A line of Pennsylvania state troopers marked the path of the protesters, many of

Dr. Vinod Seth, a delegate from North Dakota, called it a "sad

Turkish troops hunt remaining coup plotters as crackdown widens

More than 1,000 members of the security forces were involved in the manhunt for the 11 rogue soldiers in the hills around the Mediterranean coastal resort of Marmaris, where Erdogan was holidaying on the night of the coup attempt, officials said.

Turkish special forces backed by helicopters, drones and the navy hunted a remaining group of commandos thought to have tried to capture or kill President Tayyip Erdogan during a failed coup, as a crackdown on suspected plotters widened on Tuesday.

Erdogan and the government accuse U.S.-based Muslim cleric Fethullah Gulen of orchestrating the attempted power grab and have launched a crackdown on his suspected followers. More than 60,000 soldiers, police, judges and civil servants have been arrested, suspended or put under investigation.

The religious affairs directorate removed another 620 staff including preachers and instructors in the Koran on Tuesday, bringing to more than 1,100 the number of people it has purged since the July 15 coup attempt.

Foreign Minister Mevlut Cavusoglu said two Turkish ambassadors, currently in Ankara, had also been removed. Former Istanbul governor Huseyin Avni Mutlu was detained and his house searched.

"There is no institution which this structure has not infiltrated," Erdogan's son-in-law, Energy Minis-

Ranked soldiers from the Turkish Army's elite forces conduct an operation to capture the wanted plotter soldiers. GETTY IMAGES ter Berat Albayrak, said in a televised interview, referring to Gulen's network of followers.

"Every institution is being assessed and will be assessed," he said. The response from the Turkish authorities would, he said, be just and not amount to a witch-hunt.

The coup attempt raised particular questions about the air force, some of whose senior members were deeply involved, and could lead to the re-investigation of past incidents including the downing by the Turkish military of a Russian warplane near the Syrian border last year, Albayrak said.

The incident provoked Russian trade sanctions but there are signs of rapprochement, with Turkey thanking Moscow for its solid support during the abortive putsch. By contrast it has frosty ties with Europe, which has criticized the post-coup crackdown, and with the United States, which it has urged to extradite Gulen.

Albayrak made the comments as the highest-level Turkish delegation since the downing of the jet visited Moscow and officials announced a planned meeting between Erdogan and Russian President Vladimir Putin next month.

"Erdogan will be eager to send a message to Washington and EU capitals that Turkey has other options," said Tim Ash, a strategist at Nomura and a veteran Turkey watcher.

The Turkish parliament set up on Tuesday a commission to investigate the coup attempt, with the backing of all political parties. It will also examine the allegations that the Gulen movement infiltrated the government and instigated the coup attempt.

Kerry hopes to work with Russia on Syria, UN aims to restart talks

The United States said on Tuesday it hoped to announce in early August details of planned military cooperation and intelligence sharing with Russia on Syria, and a U.N. envoy said he would also aim to resume peace talks next month.

Secretary of State John Kerry said Washington and Moscow, who support opposing sides in Syria's five-year-old conflict, had made progress in recent days toward working closely together.

The proposals would have the two powers share intelligence to coordinate airstrikes against the al Qaeda-affiliated Nusra Front and prohibit the Syrian air force from attacking rebel groups labeled as moderate.

Efforts to bridge the divide between the United States and Russia and bring Syrian government and opposition forces back to negotiations come after pro-government forces have effectively put rebel-held districts of Aleppo under siege.

Concern is growing for at least 250,000 people who have been trapped in rebel-controlled eastern Aleppo since early July.

More charges possible for three men arrested after Florida club shooting

Two teens were killed and more than a dozen people were wounded Monday in the parking lot of Club Blu in attack that came six weeks after 49 people were killed at an Orlando nightclub by a man who sympathized with Islamic extremist groups.

Three men arrested for resisting authorities near the scene a nightclub shooting where two teenagers were killed are persons of interest in the investigation and could see further charges, authorities said on Tuesday.

Police in Fort Myers, located on Florida's Gulf Coast, said they have ruled out any extremist ties to the Club Blu shooting but Tuesday said they had not developed any possible motives.

"Still investigating, interviewing and following up," Capt. Jim Mulligan, a police spokesman, said in an email to Reuters on Tuesday afternoon.

Demetrius O'Neal, 19, and Tajze Battle, 22, were charged with resisting law enforcement, according to a statement from the sheriff's office.

The men are considered persons of interest in the shooting, and Fort Myers police are investigating to determine if additional charges will be brought, Sgt. Matt McDaniel, a sheriff's spokesman, told Reuters on Tuesday.

Police said Monday they were searching for additional suspects in connection with the shooting.

Two people remained hospitalized in critical condition on Tuesday, hospital officials said.

The shooting took place shortly after 12:30 a.m. EDT on Monday as a party open to teenagers was wrapping up.

StefAn Strawder, 18, a high school basketball star, and Sean Archilles, 14, were killed in the incident. At least 19 people, ranging in age from 12- to 27 years old, were wounded and treated at local hospitals.

Don't worry — Blac Chyna and Rob Kardashian are still together

For the Kardashian clan, social media is sacred.

So it was a pretty big deal that brother Rob deleted all of his Instagram pics with fiancée/babymama Blac Chyna on Monday. Though Rob is known for his social-media purges — often deleting all of his photos — he's kept his relationship with Chyna in the public eye.

But it appears that the couple isn't over.

"They didn't break up; they had a fight," Us Weekly reported. And a dramatic one at that: Chyna allegedly drew blood, scratching Rob with her long nails. Perhaps their new reality show is putting some stress on the couple (or perhaps this is a well-timed publicity stunt), but either way, the pair is back in love.

Chyna took to Snapchat to quell rumors, flashing her 7-carat rock.

Ed Hartwell calls it quits with Keisha Knight Pulliam

You'd expect nothing but happy news from a couple that's just announced they are expecting, right? That's not the case for Ed Hartwell and Keisha Knight Pulliam. Days after "The Cosby Show" alum revealed that she is having a baby girl, her husband and ex-NFL player Ed Hartwell filed for divorce. According to People.com the couple has been married for just six months.

The duo began dating last year and got engaged over New Year's Eve. A few weeks later they tied the knot in an intimate ceremony at home in the presence of family and friends. It was a total surprise and those who were invited "didn't even know it was a wedding," Pulliam said in her "Kandidly Keisha" podcasts from earlier this year.

The worst part? Not only did Hartwell file for the divorce but he is demanding a paternity test, too.

Is there a scandal being kept under wraps, or was the pressure of married life just getting to someone's head?

Bernie Sanders' lengthy DNC speech Monday night cut into "The Bachelorette," and loyal Jojo fans were not having it. Being forced to wait—on fantasy suite night, mind you — left loyal viewers devastated.

Fans who DVR-ed the episode felt especially snubbed — because the show started 30 minutes late, the end of the episode was cut off.

Though the show's fearless leader, Chris Harrison, tweeted out a warning ("Check local listings cause I'm guessing the #DNC will jack up #TheBachelorette time in many cities. Some things are even Fans eager to watch Jojo gallivant through Thailand with her sexy suitors quickly figured out that the aged politician on their screens was not a "Bachelorette" plot twist (his lack of beard scruff and hair gel were dead giveaways), prompting national shock and outrage.

LOVE WHERE YOU LIVE

The housing market in this bohemian enclave is fierce

MEGAN JOHNSON
letters@metro.us

Hear the words “Jamaica Plain,” and it’s hard not to conjure up images of young hipster families on bikes drinking fair-trade coffee. But for those who want to put down roots in JP for the long term, be prepared to throw down the gauntlet, because competition is fierce.

There are currently only 47 properties on the market in JP, and less than 25 percent of those that are single-family homes, says Doug McClure, an agent with LAER Realty Partners. Over the last six months, the average sale price of a single family home in JP was $830,000, while the average sale price of a condo was $560,000.

As a result, realtors aren’t seeing the buyers that flocked to JP 10 years ago. Mary Wallace, a realtor with Unlimited Sotheby’s International Realty in Jamaica Plain, says young people simply can’t afford to buy in the area like they used to.

“Very few people have the down payment they need, unless they’ve inherited money or have families that can help,” says Wallace, who has lived in the area since 1985. “I’m not seeing young people show up with money.”

As a result, many JP residents ditch their hopes of staying in the neighborhood. Kate Plourd Johnson, 31, lives with her husband and their pug near the Jackson Square T stop. While she’d love to buy a home in JP, it’s hard to ignore the mass exodus of young families.

“Most of our friends who lived in JP and wanted to buy end up looking and buying in Roslindale,” says Plourd.

For renters, the majority of available units are in two and three unit multifamily homes. According to McClure, rental prices currently range from $1,700 to $5,000 per month, with an average in the past six months of $2,500 per month.

Alycia Buchheit, 28, is a mental health counselor that currently lives in a rented house with four other roommates in the Forest Hills neighborhood. Though she’s only been in JP for about a year, her rent has already increased once. Still, she says the proximity to green space and a diverse population is worth the price hike.

“I used to live in Allston and it was so monotonous,” says Buchheit. “The whole street was full of college kids, and all they ever did was party. Here in JP there are people of all different races, all different ages and ways of life, and I love that.”

New in the neighborhood:

Revamping a former nursing home may not sound super glamorous, but the shuttered Goddard House is getting a face-lift. Eden Properties and Samuels & Associates, who are responsible for the likes of the Van Ness complex in Fenway and Allston's Continuum, plan to expand the historic property into a 167-unit complex. The group plans to break ground in early 2017.

House tour: Sutton Foster's NYC penthouse

Interior designer Mike Harrison takes us through the actress' recently redecorated home.

MONICA WEYMOUTH

We'll be honest: The first time we saw Sutton Foster's playfully modern Upper West Side home, we were a tad distracted by jealousy. (That view! That pink couch!) But when we took a second look at the two-time Tony Award winner's pad, we were ready to take notes and do some redecorating of our own. Luckily, interior designer Mike Harrison — who teamed up with HomeGoods to make-over the penthouse — was happy to spill some of his secrets.

Have a color strategy

Foster's home is brimming with bold color, but it's not the Foster's bedroom design relies on pattern and texture.

Relax with monochromatics

For the bedroom, Harrison went with a calming, monochromatic palette of cool blues and grays. It's subdued, yes, but far from sleepy. "When you're creating a monochromatic space, it's all about texture and pattern," he says. "That's where you create your depth and interest."

first thing you notice. Taking a cue from her beloved hot pink statement couch, Harrison dotted the living room with accents of lime and teal to continue the color story without overwhelming the eye. "I wanted it to be whimsical, but still sophisticated," he says. "Strong color is like lighting — you want to bring it into every corner of the room."

Loosen up your office

With pops of print and personal touches, Sutton's home office feels miles from the cubicles — which is exactly the

Redefine neutrals

Neutrals are important for balancing any space, especially one with as much color as Foster's. That said, there's no need to invite oatmeal and beige to the party. "People think of neutrals and they think boring," says Harrison. "Glass and metals cool the whole space and add a layer of interest without adding another color or pattern. It's superchic."

The dining room utilizes the neutral color of metals.

point. "A lot of people think an office should be serious, but that doesn't always work — you have to be productive, sure, but you also have to be inspired," says Harrison. On his must-have list: plants, good lighting and neutral patterns.

Make peace with your square footage

Penthouse or not, Foster still lives in Manhattan, so space was a consideration. Harrison subbed in side tables as end tables, just one of his space-saving hacks to make the home feel lighter and airier. "Don't work against the space — 'cozy' isn't a dirty word," he says. "You'll never make the room bigger, but you can make it what you need when you think outside the box."

Chris Sale is 14-3 this season with a 3.18 ERA. GETTY IMAGES

What would it take for the Sox to reel in Sale?

A look at what it would take to get the White Sox ace to Boston.

MATT BURKE
@burke_metro
matthew.burke@metro.us

ESPN.com ran a curious headline this week: "If White Sox get serious about selling Chris Sale, Red Sox would have to listen."

Listen to a team trying to sell you on the best pitcher in the American League? As the kids say these days, "obvi."

Red Sox boss Dave Dombrowski recalled last year's trade deadline in the piece, saying that it was the teams with the big guns that were calling the teams with the pu pu platter of prospects in the closing minutes before the deadline. Conventional thinking leads you to believe that most blockbuster deals are done with the quarters teams calling the dollar teams initially and the dollar teams eventually caving. That's not always the case, according to Dombrowski in Scott Lauber's piece.

"If you wait, I remember last year at the very end, I'm not going to say who, but I remember there were a couple clubs that were looking for [a big return], and on July 31, they were calling around and saying, 'Would you take this guy?'" Dombrowski said. "That could happen this year, too. I think it's a fun time. It's something we really need to keep abreast of, and our people do a good job of that."

As for the price tag for Sale, as we outlined last week — it would take the world, even after Sale's ugly jersey episode. Here's an idea of what it would take:

- Yoan Moncada (ranked the 5th overall prospect by MLB.com)
- Travis Shaw (Red Sox' starting third baseman)
- Rafael Devers (ranked the 15th overall prospect by MLB.com)
- Michael Kopech (now the top-ranked pitcher in Sox' farm system with loss of Anderson Espinoza)

A deal like this would strip the Red Sox of nearly all of their top prospects, outside of Andrew Benintendi, but Dombrowski is certainly the ultimate "all-in" baseball executive and the Sox are knocking on

Jersey barrier

Sale has gained a reputation for being something of a hothead and this past weekend's jersey incident did not help matters. Sale is said to have cut up a number of White Sox throwback uniforms prior to last Saturday night's Chicago-Detroit game so they couldn't be worn. Sale reportedly expressed great displeasure that he was being forced to wear the uniforms. According to ABC-7 in Chicago, the cost of the destroyed jerseys was around $12,700. Sale was suspended five games for the incident.

the door of World Series contention this year. If the White Sox want to dance, the Red Sox will certainly be willing partners.

Aries Focus on getting ahead. Doing your best to stabilize an iffy situation will lead to solutions, relief and a brighter future. Address issues instead of ignoring them. Romance will ease stress.

Taurus Don't let inflexibility stand in your way. If you are open to suggestions and willing to compromise, much will be accomplished. Learn as you go and be willing to adapt.

Gemini Be careful who you trust and what you promise. Problems will arise if you are indulgent or neglect to get your facts straight before taking part in something that could lead to regret.

Cancer Participate, but don't agree to do things that push you beyond your comfort zone. Offer alternatives. Home and personal investments and relationships are highlighted.

Leo Don't feel the need to explain everything you do. Wasting time will not get the job done. Make sure that you complete everything before you show off your accomplishments.

Virgo The doors are wide open for you to make a move, learn something new or just forge into the future with a positive attitude. This is no time to be critical.

Libra An opportunity will develop if you offer assistance. Your ability to mediate thorny situations will give your reputation a positive spin that will encourage an interesting proposal.

Scorpio Refuse to let anyone stifle your creativity or put you in jeopardy by misinterpreting what you stand for. Express the way you feel and keep moving forward.

Sagittarius You'll be torn between what you want to do and what you should do. You'll be enticed to head down the wrong path. An unhealthy choice is a risk you shouldn't take.

Capricorn Look, listen and make things happen. Any challenge you face will be worth winning. Put your all into whatever you decide to pursue. Home improvements are favored.

Aquarius Don't worry about the reaction you get from others. If you are satisfied with the way things are progressing, you don't have to answer to anyone who doubts your decisions.

Pisces Too much of anything will be to your detriment. Pace your every move and don't spend more than you can afford. Patience and tolerance will help you come out on top. EUGENIA LAST
